Friday Dec. 4th Rally/Press Conference @ 2pm in front of Google Offices

On November 3rd, 2026, Google announced that schools who refused to incorporate AI tools (either Google Gemini or Google's "AI-driven Guided Learning mode") into all students' devices would no longer be given access to google search. This ultimatum is a clear exploitation of the institutional dependency that Google has been cultivating within our schools for decades, and is a corporate assault against our children and democracy at large.

Educators Against AI is calling on the public to rally against this blatant exploitation. On December 4th 2026 @ 2pm, we will be holding a press conference at the Google San Francisco office at 345 Spear Street. Speak up. Be heard. It's time to turn off Google's access.

We are inviting experts, educators, students, Google employees, and the public at large to speak out at this crucial time. Our demand is simple: Do not, under any circumstances, accept Google's ultimatum. Google must allow schools to ban AI, and the education and the public must boycott Google as long as their ultimatum stands.

Background

As of 2025, Chromebooks have held over 60% of the global educational device market share. Because of this, they have enormous leverage over our education system; Leverage that they are attempting to use against the sovereignty of our educators and our democratic process alike. This ultimatum, if successful, would bind the hands of school boards across the country and circumvent the will of the voters in places such as Los Angeles and New York, whose school districts have moved to ban AI from classrooms almost entirely. Moreover, Google's AI is being actively used to create unprecedented surveillance capacities for both the US Military and ICE, and could be used to create ongoing government-accessible profiles of its users from childhood onward.

This is, by very definition, corporatocracy in action.

The potential harms of raising an entire generation on AI-dependent learning can not be understated. AI has repeatedly been linked to cognitive surrender and fundamental changes to how users process information on a neurobiological level. This is especially true for users whose cognitive abilities are still in development. This level of technologically-driven cognitive atrophy is historically unparalleled, and the totality of its negative effects are still largely undiscovered. If we allow Google to embed itself this deeply into the growth of our children, their learning process may depend on Google or similar AI companies for the rest of their lives.

This is an unprecedented violation of our children's internal worlds, and a clear act of violence. It must be named as such.

Ending our schools' dependence on Google will send a clear and direct message. Most of their revenue comes from Google search, and they need our support far more than we need theirs. The public needs to understand this, and we need to act now.

We refuse to let our children be farmed and groomed by a company that has broken our trust, eroded our democracy, and strives to dominate the very concept of learning itself.
